

added to the marked opposition to their employment by the War Minister, who is now openly anti-British, and working in close touch with Rotstein.

Reports as to the actual number of Russians left in Gilan are rather confusing. The most reliable of these state that there are at Resht and Enzeli about 150, mostly civilians, a few of whom have taken service with the rebels. A reliable report states that Russian staff officers are employed at rebel headquarters in Mazanderan (under Saed-ed-Dowleh). . . . of Russian gold 10-rouble pieces are now in circulation.
